Appendix A - Kinnessburn Public Meeting

In the end this was attended by Roddy Mann of Cleansing & Waste Management, Jim Hooton of Community Services, Jim Falconer of East of Scotland Water, Jim Good of SEPA and thirty or so members of the public. Murdo Macdonald chaired. Fewer than half a dozen community councillors attended.

Late on it was suggested that Fife Council Law & Admin and Transportation Services should also be asked to attend as they would be able to advise on some matters. Unfortunately due to the short notice, exacerbated by a breakdown in Fife Council's email, they could not attend.

During parts of the meeting some members of the public were extremely verbally aggressive and rude towards the officials who deserve thanks for their calm patience and courtesy in the face of ill-mannered provocation.

Most of the discussion concerned the stretch of the Kinnessburn in front of Dempster Terrace as far as Greenside Place. The meeting had been leafleted to buildings from Maggie Murray's Bridge to Greenside Place.

Summary (minus the blood, sweat and tears).

Ownership

It is not clear who owns parts of the Kinnessburn's banks. While the residents of Dempster Terrace etc were adamant their responsibilities only extend to their front gates and could quote good evidence to support this it seems there is no record of ownership of the banks themselves. Fife Region/NEF District did and now Fife Council do undertake some grass cutting and cleaning etc of the burn it is on a goodwill basis as it is too difficult to determine with whom responsibility actually lies.

Water Quality

SEPA and ESW definitions of water quality are technical, based on suspended particles and microorganism counts. Most people seemed to count ducks and fish as they are rather more obvious. SEPA and ESW hold that the water quality of the burn is better now than a few years ago - when there were regular sewage discharges into the burn during heavy rain - due to the new storm water system. Others claimed that there are fewer ducks, fish etc than 15, 20, 30 years ago so the water quality must be at fault.

Rubbish

Complaints about the amount of rubbish in the burn were met with complete understanding by C&WM who 'share the frustration' of residents at the quantities of foreign objects thrown into the burn. The burn is inspected daily during the working week and will be cleared if it is safe to do so. Clearing is not always easy as fishing out debris is constrained by requirements of safety, particularly if the burn is high. If people spot a particular problem, to bring it to C&WM attention phone 01334-412724.

Flooding

There are two types of flooding. One is the Kinnessburn bursting its banks; see below for that. The other is water or sewage emerging from the ground from ESW's pipes. Anything that looks like the latter, or inappropriate discharges from the storm tanks should be reported to ESW's 24 hour call centre on 08457-420420.

Width of the burn

Many people were concerned by the change in the width of the burn with the build-up of sediment and the growth of plants on top of it, fearing rats and mink are living there and eating the ducks. Also the narrowing is held to be endanger properties by flooding. Finally some (not all) find the burn to be unsightly, as it was canalised (cleared and banking installed) some time ago (late 60s/early 70s?) and is now reverting to a more natural state which they say is inappropriate in a town environment.

While Community Services seemed willing to consider running a dredger/digger up the burn SEPA were unable (because of their legal duties) to countenance such a thing, and made it clear that prosecution could result as any such work would inevitably involve environmental damage. What SEPA didn't quite get across, or people were not prepared to hear, was SEPA's statutory duty to preserve the environment in terms of the measures they are required to use (biodiversity, quality of water etc). Looking pretty isn't something they can take into account.

What SEPA can take into account is threat to life or property through flooding. If either of these can be shown then they will be able to reassess the burn to allow clearing work. The advice they have is that there is no significant flood danger at the moment, although they did not seem to be aware of any flooding since the harbour gates event 14-15 years ago. Obviously there have been a number of incidents of the burn exceeding its banks since then. The flood authority is Fife's Transportation Service in Glenrothes who might be a useful source of information.

The way forward?

- Investigate whether there is a way of re-classifying the burn so that clearing is possible.
- Re-assessment of the flood danger of the burn.
- As SEPA is an agency controlled by the Scottish Executive, advice on how to approach this problem could be sought from Iain Smith MSP.
- Or people could learn to love biodiversity (and perhaps ducks in their living room...)
